Thu, 21 Mar 2019 02:01:00 GMT Analytical Chemistry (ACS Publications) - I recently came across the interesting set of reactions between Grignard reagents and (terminal) propargylic chlorides. SN2 substitution gives allenes with a new C-C single bond, along with a mess of other stuff resulting from deprotonation of the terminal alkyne including the venerable alkyldiene carbene, perhaps my favorite obscure intermediate in all of organic chemistry! Currently, the European Union, the United States, Canada, Japan, and many other countries require producers to obtain special certification based on government-defined standards in order to market food as organic within their borders.
